ted\_rood@yahoo.comA Message from Ted Rood:"I love the smell of massive snowball buying in the morning!"UPDATE: Massive Snowball Buying in Bonds Just Now

The day was already set to begin on a positive note. We already had a nice "gap" (a positive development from a technical perspective--signifies shift in momentum) between yesterday's closing levels and the opening levels from overnight bond trading in Tokyo. We were already picking up some more ground in early domestic trading as 10yr yields moved steadily lower at the open.

But the past 15 minutes have seen a massive acceleration in bond-buying, stock selling, and "risk-off" movement in Yen/$.

There are no specific drivers of this new movement--at least not this current leg of the movement. Of course we know what the general motivation is behind the general direction of today's risk-off trade. But when we see volume and volatility spike like this (and when I scour multiple newswire feeds, email campfires, twitter, etc. and come up with nothing), we can be confident that some trader made some big trade. Then another, and another, and soon, traders are making trades because certain trigger levels were hit. Those new trades cause trigger levels to be hit for other traders, and thus a snowball rally is born.

Incidentally, traders in all markets set up trigger levels of various types for various reasons. This adds to snowball momentum because of the interconnections between several of the markets we follow. For instance, German Bunds actually had a sharper move just now than US Treasuries, and Japanese Yen are leading the chart in the bigger picture (as we'd expect them to, being that they are the posterchild for the risk-on/off trade).

The net effect is simply a nice, big volume move lower in US rates. Where it stops, nobody knows, but don't be surprised to see a bounce at some point today.

Responsive service, experienced expertise

I've dedicated my 22 year mortgage career to client education, superior service, and honest answers. The lending landscape has changed dramatically the past few years, and continues to do so. My job is to ensure client partners' loans close quickly, without surprises, and I take that responsibility very seriously. Referrals are a responsibility I appreciate; they're a measure of trust, and that trust must be earned every day, on every referral.
