New Home Sales Abruptly Back to Flat Long-Term Trend

New home sales nose-dived in September, dropping by 11.5 percent from the August level. A joint release from the U.S. Census Bureau and the Department of Housing and Urban Development puts the sale of newly constructed single family homes at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 468,000 units in September compared to a revised August rate of 529,000. Analysts' expectations ranged from 535,000 to 560,000.

There was a further jolt in that the August number which originally represented a 5.7 percent increase was a significant downgrade from the original estimate of 552,000 units. September remains 2 percent above the September 2014 rate of 459,000 units. In the longer term, today's drop could be seen as a 'leveling-off' and return to the flat trend that's been intact for most of the past 2.4 years.

September's number was the lowest since last November when the rate of sales was 449,000 units and today's report echoes a similar drop new home sales experienced in the spring when a healthy increase in May was followed by a significant downward revision for May and a further decline in Jun to 469,000 units. Today's report also follows last week's residential construction report in which single family permits and starts barely budged from the previous month.
