Housing Starts/Permits Convincingly End Recent Slump

Housing permits and starts both reversed their respective two-month slides in June, and both did so convincingly, far outpacing analysts' expectations. Activity was especially strong in the Midwest.

The U.S. Census Bureau and the Department of Housing and Urban Development said building permits were issued at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1,254,000 units. This is a 7.4 percent jump from the May rate of 1,168,000. June permits were issued at a 5.1 percent higher pace than a year earlier.

Housing Starts

The permitting number left analysts in the dust. Those polled by Econoday had expected the number to come in between 1.170 million and 1.225 million, with a consensus of 1.206 million.

Single family permits were issued at a rate of 811,000, a 4.1 percent month-over-month gain from the May estimate of 779,000 and up 9.2 percent from June 2016. Permits for units in buildings with five or more were at the annual rate of 409,000, a 14.6 percent gain from May but 2.4 percent behind a year earlier.
